SALT Talks Open Today

In Vienna

By Chalmers M. Roberts VIENNA, April 15 (WP),-The United States and the Soviet Union arms limitation talks tomorrow in this city, the site of so many history-making conferences.

But the attention of the delegates, like that of the citizens of Vienna, was very much on the fate of Apollo-13, a symbol of the space age which reflects the arms control problem at the SALT talks. The rocket which put men into space also is the device that can rain death on millions.

The minimal hope for the Vienna SALT talks is an agreement to curb the rival inventories of intercontinental ballistic missiles (ICBMs). The more hopeful want to curb the multiple warheads now soon to be mounted missile defense systems.

HOUSTON, April 15 (WP) .-reported today to be slightly off course: it must make a path correction or it will miss the earth by about 100 miles and shoot out in a long elliptical orbit into space.

The astronauts, working to stay alive on short supplies of essential oxygen, water and ship, would not survive until the capsule returned to the However, officials at the Manned Space Center emphasized that the chances of making the correction by firing the main engine of the lunar module The firing is scheduled at 0443 Thursday. It will consist of a 15-second burn with the space officials said, it would put the maimed moonship right in the middle of the earth-re-entry corridor. If it failed, they said there was plenty of fuel and of time—until 1713 GMT Thursday

The lunar module engine needed for the course correction has worked perfectly so iar. However, before Monday's emergency, the engine which to carry the lunar module to the moon's surface, had never been stopped and restarted in

If the lunar module engine should fail, the astronauts could use the small control jets on the side of either the lunar module or of the command module to aim the spaceship into the reentry corridor. The space agency had no explanation for the spacecraft's deviation from its "free return" trajectory, which was supposed to have brought it back to earth without course corrections. A mission control spokesman said flight planners had timed the maneuver to coincide with bursting of a pressurehelium tank aboard the lunar rising and normally would have been vented, but flight controllers did not want it to vent because it would cause an unpredictable change in the Apol-

By letting the disc burst, the gas from the tank will be dissipated in a way that will have less chance of throwing the spacecraft off course. And by firing the course correction burn at the same time, plan-ners hoped to eliminate any effects of vibration from the rupturing of the disc.

The Apollo crew reported still nother problem—a flashing battery alarm. Mission control

The battery was turned off. The battery affected is one of four in the descent stage of the lunar module. Space officials said the descent stage systems — which include the lunar landing engine to be used for the next course correction maneuver-could still operate on three batteries only. There are another two batteries in the ascent stage of the lunar module, and three large reserve batteries in the command module.

Mission control said later it had determined that the battery was shut off while ground controllers looked into the mat-

When the battery was put back on the line, the waiting light went on again.

Controllers told the astro-nauts to leave it hooked up. They also were told that the spaceship will no longer have any way of indicating malfunc-tioning batteries. However, mission control said the problem could be watched from the ground. Despite the need for a course change, National Aeronautics and Space Administration officressed optimism as the space-craft sped toward the earth with the astronauts hoarding essential supplies aboard. Flight director Eugene Kranz said: "I think the spacecraft is in excellent shape, and I think it's fully capable of getting the crew back. I feel we are much night as far as consumables and everything is concerned. have a better margin to work with and we have more flexi-

In addition, meteorologists said that it is possible that a tropical storm now 500 miles away might be in the recovery area by Friday.

Meanwhile, the astronauts, reportedly in good spirits, were as inactive as possible to further conserve water and power, They rested except for about one hour this morning.

During that time, mission control radioed up instructions for setting hundreds of switches in the command ship, placing them in proper order for reentry and splashdown.

The target time for splash-down is 1804 GMT, but space agency officials said that it might be somewhat later if the storm forces a shift in landing Tuesday night, the astronauts

During the Apollo-13 crisis, Muscovites have been eager, even anxious, for news about the flight and the safety of the crew. Many Russians have been relying on foreign radio broadcasts for information. Persons with shortwave radios have received numerous phone calls from friends seeking news.

Soviet news media have given the flight minimal coverage. This morning's edition of Izvestia, the government news-paper, carried the text of Mr. Kosygin's message to President Nixon and a two-paragraph report that the spacecraft had flown around the moon and was headed back toward the earth-

British Ships

SINGAPORE, April 15 (Reuters):—Six ships of the British Far East Fleet sailed from here today to the Apollo-12's secondary splashdown area in the Indian Ocean.

The ships are being rushed there in case the Apollo-13, due to splash down in the southwest Pacific on Friday, has to be re-routed.

They are the frigates Phoebe and Nubian, the service ship Vidal, the tankers Ennerdale vessel Tarbatness.

The Phebe and Nubian have radar which could pinpoint the capsule's position after re-entering the earth's atmosphere. They also have air-traffic control capability which will enable them to coordinate search and rescue operations.

Several of the ships are carrying doctors and helicopters and the Tarbatness is equipped with a helicopter pad and has a heavy derrick capable of lifting the Apollo capsule from the water.

The ships' departure from Singapore follows British Prime Minister Harold Wilson's message to President Nixon that "our forces throughout the world are at your disposal should you feel that they can help in any recovery opera-

Two more frigates are heading to an Atlantic Ocean point south of Rio de Janeiro just in case the splashdown occurs there, though a spokesman said this was only an outside pos-

Another offer of aid came from the Italian Defense Ministry, which ordered the Italian armed forces to be ready to give any help needed should the Apollo splash down in the Mediterranean. Yesterday, France volunteered its aid. Uruguay said its naval units patrolling the south Atlantic would aid in rescue if the craft should land in that area.

Chile has alerted its ships in the Pacific to give aid in the recovery if it is needed. South African naval and air units have been placed on alert to give assistance should the Apollo land anywhere in the South African region.

The New Zealand Navy said it was standing by to make a dash to aid in the recovery. The National Aeronautics and Space Administration has asked Australia's Parkes Radio Telescope to aid in picking up messages from the spacecraft. The telescope has three times the capacity of NASA's 85-footdiameter dishes near Canberra. Prayers Said Throughout The World

At Vatican, Ball Park And Wailing Wall

VATICAN CITY, April 15 (AP) -Pope Paul VI said today that he shared "the universal trepidation" surrounding the fate of America's Apollo-13

"We cannot forget at this moment the lot of the astronauts of Apollo-13," he told a general audience in St. Peter's Basilica. About 10,000 Romans and tourists were present. "We hope that at least their lives can be saved." the 72-year-old pontiff added.

"We understand the bitterness of the promoters of this venture and of the scientists behind it."

Prolonged applause greeted the Pope's remarks. This morning Pope Paul offered a special prayer during his mass for the safe return of astronauts Capt. James A. Lovell jr., Fred W. Haise jr. and John L. Swigert jr.

Pope Paul has been an avid follower of space exploits. He has received U.S. astronauts in private audience, including the men from the first moon land-ing, Neil A Armstrong, Edwin Aldrin and Michael Collins.

At Walling Wall

JERUSALEM, April 15 (AP). -Special prayers for the safe return of the Apollo-13 astronauts were offered today at the Wailing Wall, Judaism's holiest shrine.

About 100 Israelis and tourists who were visiting the wall in the Arab sector of the city participated in the service.

HOUSTON, April 15 COPD. -A crowd of about 10,000 at the Los Angeles-Houston baseball game in the Astrodome rose for a minute of silent prayer last night for the safe return of the astronauts.

A signal was flashed on the giant scoreboard: "Ladies and gentlemen, please rise for a minute of silent prayer for the safe return of our Apollo-13 astronauts."

AQUARIUS: Aquarius, Roger. HOUSTON: The on-board display shows less than a minute to go in the burn now. Coming up on four minutes into the burn—don't forget the descent rate went off—10 seconds to go.

AQUARIUS: Shut down.

HOUSTON: Roger, shut down. That was Comdr. Jim Lovell reporting shut down. The engine is off. We're at 79 hours 32 minutes into the flight.

HOUSTON: Okay Aquarius, we're working on what's going to happen next. In the meantime, we'd like to take some highpowered stuff off the line. AQUARIUS: I can't roll the way I want to . . I really don't know what the combination is . . . all right, I now have pitch and yaw, pitch and roll going into the designated amounts . . . HOUSTON: Stand by a minute . . . the pitch is the important

AQUARIUS: Okay, it's coming down . . . well, I guess I better eat something. Hey, look at this . . . jelly beans.

HOUSTON: By the way, Aquarius, we see the results now from the Apollo-12 seismometer. Looks like your booster just hit the moon and it's rocking it a little bit, over. AQUARIUS: Well, at least something worked on this flight.

HOUSTON: Okay, just some info. We're working up a pro-cedure for you to use command module lithium hydroxide canisters to connect to your hoses, the outlet hoses in the lunar module, so as time passes in the mission you can continue scrubbing the LEM atmosphere. AQUARIUS: We better start working on that modification

HOUSTON: Yes. We wish we could send you a kit and it would be kind of like putting a model airplane together or so thing. As it turns out this contraption will look like a mail box when you get it all put together. AQUARIUS: Just for your information, Houston, during, just prior to going around the moon, we saw a lot of debris that was floating by us. Debris of one rather large piece. Sort of looked like the wrapping off a line of some sort. It still is with us. HOUSTON: Roger.

AQUARIUS: Even after our free return midcourse yesterday.

HOUSTON: Okay, we copy that. AQUARIUS: Well, willy-nilly, I can't stop that. To roll either way won't do it. AQUARIUS: Are you reading 1640, Houston?

HOUSTON: Roger, we're reading it.

AQUARIUS: Will proceed. Here's our residuals. HOUSTON: Roger, very small.

HOUSTON: Apollo control; 79 hours 33 minutes, 5,707 nautical miles out from the moon at this time. I say that was a good burn. AQUARIUS: Roger. Now we want to power down as soon HOUSTON: Rog. Understand.

AQUARIUS: Suggest maybe that you just read off the circuiteakers you wanted to power down as you did yesterday for us. HOUSTON: O.K. We have a procedure ready to send up to you here in about two minutes. Let us know when you're all ready to take it. AQUARIUS: O.K. Houston. Be better to write this on a blank page, Vance, or can we use some portion of the power-down list re in the contingency book that already exists?

HOUSTON: Stand by. Slight delay here, Jim. It'll be a couple of minutes before we read that up to you and we're looking at the contingency checklist power-down and that's on Page 5. You might be getting that out while we get all ready to give HOUSTON: 79 hours 37 minutes into the flight. Okay. make that power five in the contingency check list, Fred. And let's see in the middle part of the page it starts emergency powerdown and we'll mark that up. We're 79 hours 37 minutes into the flight. Guidance reported that the burn duration was literally right on the money. AQUARIUS: Power five, emergency power down.

HOUSTON: But hold off on it because we might have to start PTC up again here, and that's the point that's being resolved right at the moment, so stand by.

AQUARIUS: Okay. HOUSTON: The term PTC is Passive Thermal Control, is harbeque mode which has been used on previous flights. There's discussion in the control center now as to whether or not we should continue in that mode during the coast phase-in. We're 79 hours 39 minutes into the flight and continuing to monitor. This is Apollo Control Houston.

HOUSTON: Apollo Control, Houston, 79 hours 40 minutes into the mission. We show Apollo-13 at 6,008 nautical miles out from the moon at this time, traveling at a speed of 4,980 feet

"Aquarius, you're looking good," istronaut Vance Brand radioed Apollo-13 from Houston's Manned Spacecraft Center. "You're go at three min-A minute later, Capt. Lovell reported shutdown of the en-gine. It had fired a full four minutes and increased their speed by almost 1,000 miles an hour. In moments, the spacecraft had accelerated to a point where it was more than 7,000 miles from the moon and moving toward earth at a speed of almost 4,000 miles an hour. While nobody could forecast their chances of making it back to earth safe and sound, Capt.

Lovell, Mr. Haise and Mr. Swigert were behaving like men bent on beating the odds. The odds against them came from the fact that they were still forced to fly with the twoman landing craft, Aquarius, after the command craft, Odyssey, lost power and oxygen

Monday night.

The question facing the crew and the manned space program was whether the landing craft's electricity and oxygen would be enough to keep the crew alive until Friday morning, when they were due to re-enter the earth's atmosphere. "It's the most critical situa-tion we've faced so far in the manned space flight program in flight," flight director Glynn Lunney said again Wednesday. "We're a long way from home and we have a plan for carrying out the rest of the mission, but there's going to be no relaxation at all, as far as that goes, from now until splash."

There were some fears Tuesday night that the spaceship might be breaking up completely, but space officials maintained their outward calm and dismissed this as pure speculation.

This new alarm was raised when gas and bits of material -including a four-inch-square silvery piece of metal-were spotted floating past the win-dows of the lunar module, on the nose of the main ship. A stream of vapor was also seen escaping from the service

"Nobody knows down here if it's the service module breaking up," a Houston spokesman said. "But even if it was, it wouldn't matter. It's not important anyway. They could jettison the module now. They are only maintaining it to improve stability." Mr. Haise reported another complication Wednesday night. said he heard a strange thudding noise in the landing craft's lower half and saw debris drifting up from it. "I just heard a little thum:

down in the descent stage and Saw a few snowflakes coming up from that way," Mr. Haise told mission control. "It looked like they came from immediately down that way." Mission control checked and replied nothing appeared to be wrong. But the "snowllakes" kept drifting up for several minutes, Mr. Haise said. Houston promised to keep a close eve on instrument readines radioed from the craft in an effort to solve the new mystery. Despite their difficulties, the crew seemed in good spirits. Capt. Lovell observed that when they flew from behind the moon they passed right by the moon's Smith Sea. A little later, Mr. Brand told Capt. Lovell that Apollo-13's third-stage rocket engine had crashed into the moon 120 miles from the seismometer left on the moon by the Apollo-12 crew part of Rocking the Moon "It looks like your booster hit the moon and is rocking it a little hit," Mr. Brand said. "Well." Capt, Lovell replied, "at least something worked on this flight." The crew had shut down everything in the command craft but its alarm system and was managing to work, live, sleep, eat and breathe by keeping the tunnel between the two spacecraft open to circulate the landing craft's oxygen into the command craft.

Though they never once sounded desperate or even frantic. the crewmen were very much aware of their plight.

of power and about 300 pounds of water.

While engineers felt they had enough oxygen and electricity aboard to get the crew home, they were worried about a possible water shortage in the linked Apollo-13 spacecraft—not drinking water, but coolant water that has to be recirculated enough to keep from either freezing or evaporating. "Our most critical concern now is the water," said flight director Gerald Griffin late Wednesday. "We have to power down tonight to minimum levels, to keep all our electronics as cool as possible." The second most serious concern is the electricity aboard the landing craft, or lunar module (LEM), which was built only to land two men on the moon, keep them there a day and a half and get them back to the larger command module in orbit around the moon.

Of less concern is the oxygen supply aboard the landing craft, which carries enough in its most the rest of the trip. The might happen to cut off the landing craft's flow of one before it reaches the vicinity of

Burger Have Much in Common On Campaigns

By Fred P. Graham
WASHINGTON, April 15 (NYT).—President Nixon's third choice for associate justice of the Supreme Court was undoubtedly Chief for associate justice of the Supreme Court was undoubtedly Chief Justice Warren E. Burger's first choice. Judge Harry A. Blackmun, whose nomination to the Supreme Court was announced yesterday, is an old and close friend of the Chief Justice's and was known to have his strong support for the position. The two men have so much in common by background and judicial philosophy that it seems logical that if the new nominee is continued by the Senate, they will often see things the same way on the Supreme Court,

In his first term on the high court, Mr. Burger has dissented frequently—particularly when the majority extended criminal suspects' rights—but so far, no bloc of justices has begun to form around the new Chief Justice's views. Judge Blackmun's judicial record suggests that with this and perhaps future Supreme Court nominations President Nixon could lay the groundwork for a mildly conservative, law enforcement-oriented "Burger majority" on the high

On the basis of some of his most significant opinions as a lower fed-eral-court jurist, Judge Blackmun appears strikingly like Chief Justics Burger in judicial philosophy. They seem most alike in their re-luctance to follow the Warren court's lead in expanding the rights of criminal defendants.

Judge Blackmun's written opinions are scholarly, thorough and cautious. They are unlikely to be criticized as "mediocre," as were some of those of Judge G. Harrold Carswell, President Nixon's prior Judge Blackmun's opinions are also unlikely to be criticized for excessive brevity, as Judge Carswell's were. In 1967, Blackmun wrote a 26-page opinion upholding the death penalty imposed against Duane Earl Pope, the former footbail star who killed three bank em-ployees during a Kansas bank rob-bery in 1965. The Supreme Court plaining that he is one who is vacated the ruling in a one-paragraph decision.

Among lawyers, Judge Blackmun is known for his expert opinions on votes on cases of broader public interest stamp him as a moderate on civil rights and civil liberties issues, though more conservative on

Although several of his better-known rulings have been reversed by the Supreme Court, his opinions did not indicate a die-hard resistance to the Warren court's liberal trends so much as a feeling that if the law is to be changed by judges' decision, those judges should be sitting on the Supreme Court.

In one of his best-known decisions, Judge Blackmun rejected the claims of an interracial couple from St. Louis who asserted that an almost-forgotten 1856 civil rights law could be used to block realestate developers from refusing to House Republican leader Gerald R. sell them a house. But he stated Ford of Michigan continued setting that "It would not be too surpris-ing if the Supreme Court one day" ment move against U.S. Supreme were to uphold their contention. Pushes Integration

Unlike Judge Carswell and Judge Clement F. Haynsworth Jr., whom President Nixon first nominated for the seat, Judge Blackmun has consistently ordered Southern school officials to move forward with desegregation measures, even when Justice Douglas's dealings with terday.

He joined in an opinion in that case that expressed strong doubts about the constitutionality of the Communist Control Act of 1954.

A strong clue to the new nominee's judicial philosophy seems to be contained in his opinion in the case of William L. Maxwell, an Arkenses Negro who is facing execution for raping a white woman.

had watched the space program with a complacency born of repeated success. The memory of the early disaster at Cape Kennedy and the constant reminders from the men of Apollo of the risks involved in each flight had been answered by the string of magnificent performances by craft and crew alike. Even the bolt of lightning that jarred the early minutes of Apollo-12 seemed more a demonstration of the invincibility of our spacecraft than a reminder of impending peril. Then came "a pretty large bang," from a meteorite, or an explosion, or whatever, and suddenly we remember that three men are a long, long way from home, their lives suspended on the slimmest kind of thread The warnings, the talk of risk and of danger, came flooding back

Those who are in the Apollo program—the engineers, the planners, the astronauts times. They knew something could go wrong anytime, anywhere. They hoped that when it did the men in the craft or the men in mission control could find a way to avoid disaster. But they had faced up to the possibility that a solution might not be found, the men might be stranded in space, that men might die-swiftly in a ball of fire or slowly as oxygen ran out. Now the rest of us must face up to these things. The risks the spacemen run are no greater, probably much less, than those we ask men to run daily in Vietnam. But they are merely more public-and more exotic. Since all of us shared the moments of triumph with the astronauts, we must share with them the moments of crisis, moments that they are accepting, and bravely, as a matter of probabilities and possibilities.

What happened out there Monday night is far from the worst situation that the men of Apollo could have encountered, with a difference of a day or so. The same mishap, occurring while two men were on the surface of the moon, would have meant almost certain death, and so would have the same event, occurring during the trip home after the lunar lander had been jettisoned. Nevertheless, the situation is still touch and go.

Until 10 o'clock Monday night, most of us The moon landing craft, now the temporary haven for the astronauts, was not designed for that job. One slight flaw in its equipment might snap the thread on which life depends. Similarly, one slight crack in the heat shield induced by whatever went wrong Monday night could turn that small capsule into an oven as it plunges through the atmosphere at re-entry.

Thus the line between crisis and tragedy is still very thin. But it has always been so in the world in which explorers live. One slight miscalculation, one mechanical error, one unforeseen interference by nature, one human mistake and Columbus might not have discovered America, Lindbergh might not have flown the Atlantic-Hillary might not have made it up Mt. Everest, Lindbergh wrote of this in describing his epic flight:

"Looking ahead at the unbroken horizon and limitless expanse of water, I'm struck by my arrogance in attempting such a flight. themselves—have measured those risks many. I'm giving up a continent, and heading out to sea in the most fragile vehicle ever devised by man. Why should I be so certain that a swinging compass needle will lead me to land and safety? Why have I been so sure that I can hold the nose of the Spirit of St. Louis on an unmarked point on that uniform horizon and find Nova Scotia, and Newfoundland, and Ireland, and finally an infinitesimal spot on the earth's surface called Le Bourget?

Lindbergh gave up a continent, as the astronauts gave up a planet, because he had measured the risks and found them reasonable for all the possibility or disaster lurking around the corner-it does so every day for men and nations. So if we are going to applaud the glories, we must confront the dangers along the way. All we can do as that unlikely-looking craft limps back from the moon, is to hope that the men who ride in it and the men in Houston who guide it can find what Lindbergh found.

"Somewhere in an unknown recess of my mind."- he wrote, "I've discovered that my ability rises and falls with the essential prob-'lems that confront me. What I can do depends largely on what I have to do to stay alive and on course."

Brandt-Nixon Talks

Chancellor Willy Brandt's visit has helped to contain the widening policy gap that has been opening recently between Washington and Bonn. But it also has underlined dangers

Three interconnected issues threaten the United States and its most powerful NATO ally with doubts and misunderstandings: negotiations with the East by both countries. debates about levels and costs of American troops in Europe and the impact of the evolving Common Market on American trade.

President Nixon has spoken of "an era" of negotiation replacing East-West confrontation and he has taken the route of extreme caution in his own strategic arms limitation talks (SALT) with the Soviet Union, Bonn's more active efforts to normalize relations with Russia, Poland and East Germany have been greeted with public coolness and private questioning in Washington.

Bonn is not being urged by the Nixon administration to break off negotiations with the East, but the fear is being expressed at the White House that Bonn will enhance East Germany's diplomatic status, hamper its relations with its Western allies, and weaken the Western legal position in Berlin without significantly improving the fate of the East German population or achieving any other substantial gains. In that event, the internal political backlash in West Germany, it is argued, might be even more dangerous than the cost to the NATO alliance. Bonn's answer is that the backlash would be worse if the Eastern effort were not made and that Mr. Brandt, who learned about the Russians as mayor of West Berlin, is not as soft as he

One irony in this debate is that the Nixon administration has itself weakened the platform of strength from which the Brandt government has sought to negotiate with the East by statements implying that significant American troop reductions in Europe are contemplated after June 1971.

Mr. Brandt is prepared to open negotiations later this year to continue offsetting ings against Douglas. the bulk of the dollar outflow incurred by American troops in Germany after June 1971, when the current two-year "offset" agreement expires. But with its forces largely equipped. West Germany is reducing arms purchases here, the chief "offset" in the past. Other mechanisms will have to be found if finances are not to play an important role again in determining American troop

Bonn could help keep American payments in balance by working within the Common Market to restrain farm prices and subsidized surpluses, which are reducing American agricultural exports both to Europe and to third markets. But the political power of the German farm bloc limits Mr. Brandt's capability

There was no communiqué after the Nixon-Brandt talks, no pretense that the difficult problems discussed have been solved. They probably have been defused; but continuous close consultation will be essential if they are not to rebound again in an explosive

Fragile Technology

A' sudden crisis aboard Apollo-13, striking during what should have been the safest and most uneventful part of the long and lonely journey to the moon, reminds us how fragile is our technology and how awful the dangers accepted by the men who venture into space.

Those who object to space projects as a wanton risk of human life and a vast diversion of funds from more worthwhile research will seize on this accident as an argument for a pause or at least for a drastic slowing down in the present program.

Indochina Jockeying

It is now perfectly clear that China wants an extension of the Vietnam conflict to all Indochina. For the time being, the White House has chosen to play it "cool," It actually still wants to hope that things are not that serious and that an extension of the conflict to Laos and Cambodia can still be avoided. This is why the recent French proposals have been received with so much reservation.

President Nixon continues to bet on "an anti-Communist stronghold" in South Vietnam. He believes that he can attain this without being compelled to intervene in Laos and Cambodia. In this perspective, a broader negotiation, with the participation of China, could result only in the crumbling of all his policy. If Laos and Cambodia really flare up, the United States will have no other choice than to become involved for several years in an Indochina war or to accept the international conference which would toll the bell for all its hopes in Southeast Asia, -From Le Figaro (Paris).

The Attack on Justice Douglas

By James Reston

WASHINGTON.—The Republicans have a new nominee for the Supreme Court of the United States—Judge Harry A. Blackmun—and a new "villain" on the court itself, Justice William O. Douglas. Now that a majority of the Senate has said that Judges Haynsworth and Carswell are not qualified to sit on the Supreme Court, Vice-President Agnew and the Republican leader in the House, Rep. Gerald Ford of Michigan, are asking: What about Justice Douglas? The Vice-President has said on television that the question should at least be examined. Ford is leading what he calls a "broadbipartisan group" in the instigating impeachment proceed-

the Republicans. For unless they can actually impeach and convict Douglas, the only result of their action will be to strengthen his determination to stay on the court as long as he lives. lower levels, the principal conduit for Egypt's information on the big-power talks is Russia. Sisco is America's negotiator in the talks with Russia. Compromise Urged

Although details of the Nasser-Sison conversations were not revealed, Sisco is understood to have emphasized that both Reypt and Israel must compromise to reach a political solution. Sisco is understood to have carried the same message to Tel Aviv.

Egypt insists on total withdrawal from "all" territory occupied by Israel in the six-day war, meaning not only the Sinai peninsula but East Jerusalem, Jordan's West Bank and the Syrian Golan Heights, For Egypt, withdrawal must precede any other step toward settlement.

not a step toward one. Another aspect of Sisco's visit is that it signals a concern—both in Cairo and Washington, but for different reasons—about the increasing Russian presence in Egypt. Russia supplies the bulk of Egypt's military equipment. And the Soviet Union has recently installed SA-3 anti-aircraft miss to defend against low-flying planes and has provided the technicians to operate them. Sisco's visit might not have taken place if President Nixon had decided to sell additional Phantoms and other combat aircraft to Israel Though the United States is still Israel's backer, the decision to withhold the Phantoms earned positive marks for America in the Arab world. Washington has indicated it is ready to re-establish diplomatic relations with Egypt, but under-stands Cairo's reluctance to do so in the absence of some movement toward a settlement.

Before Sisco arrived, Reyptian

officials emphasized that the ini-tiative for the visit came from Washington, not Cairo. It is under stood that that is correct. VIENNA - MEETING PLACE OF THE WORLD

The very fact, that Vienna has been chosen as location for the SALT | CONGRESS AND CONVENTION CITY (Strategic Armaments Limitation Talks) confirms more than other facts the outstanding position which this city has gained throughout the two last decades as local point of international meetings, conferences and conventions. While this development has been particularly favoured by neutral Austria's position in the heart of Europe, it reminds of the famous Vienna Congress of 1815.

This city has, indeed, besides offering all technical facilities, an aimosphere recognized to favour international understanding and coopera-tion and has been the location of many world-wide conferences in the last years, particularly those held under the auspices of the United Nations such as the 1968 Conference on the Law of Treaties, on Outer Space and on Road Traffic.

it may be recalled, that Vienna has been also chosen to hold head-quarters of IAEA (International Atomic Energy Agency) since 1957 and of UNIDO (UN Industrial Development Organization) since 1967. Due to this development and in order to facilitate international activities here, the Austrian Government will, together with the City of Vienna, shortly start construction of a UN-City on the banks of the Danube-river and thereby illustrate how much importance is being attached to continuous international cooperation. The SALT, undertaken by the United States of America and the Soviet Union, are undoubtedly the major event in the long list of such ventures and possibly the most important of them. This will be illustrated by the place chosen for the opening-ceremony, which will take place today in the famous baroque castle of Belvedere, the very same one, where in 1955 the Austrian State Treaty was signed by the Foreign Ministers of Austria and of the signatory big powers. The spirit, which has then prevailed may hopefully inspire the present negotiations. Best wishes for a successful outcome will accompany the negotiations which may determine our very future in brightening the perspectives of security and of world beace.

A brief history of the Palais an der Strudelhofstiege

The Palais (bottom picture) was built in 1873 by Ferdinand Fellner, architect of the Wiener Volkstheater, the Ronacher Theatre, and the Academy of Commerce, for Joseph, Knight of Mallmann. Already during construction it was bought by Philipp, Duke of Württemberg. At the turn of the century Count Leopold Berchtold, then Minister of Foreign Affairs of Austria-Hungary, bought the Palais. In remembrance of him one of the halls was named Berchtold Hall, where in 1914 the ultimatum to Serbia was signed.

The Strudelhofstiege became world famous through the novel bearing the same name by Heimito von Doderer, which was first published in 1951.

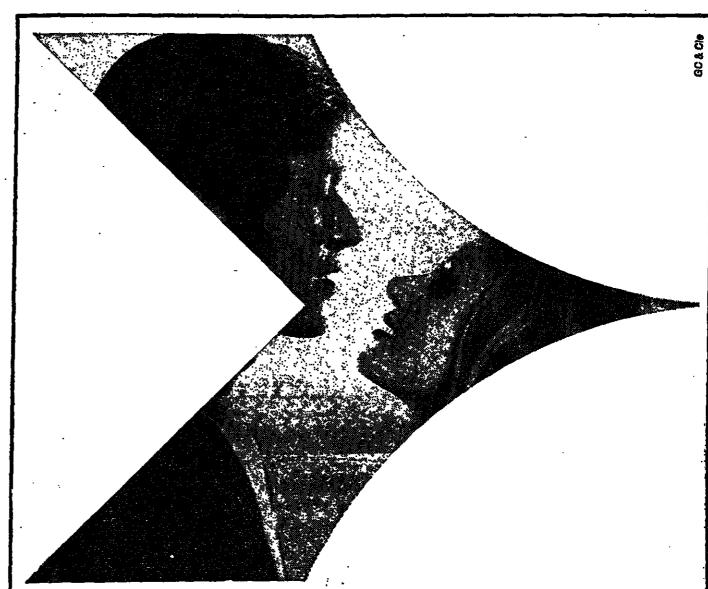

The original Srudelhof, built in 1690 by the painter to the Imperial court, Peter von Strudel, served after the death of the latter as a hospital for plague victims sellor White thanked the Austrian gov- and later on as an orphanage. In 1795 the Strudelhof property was divided and

NEW YORK, April 15 (NYT). __while me talk a great deal about being a child-orient-ed society, we're markedly and dangerously neglectful of children," according to Urie Bron-fenbrenner, professor of psy-chology and child development at Cornell University.

Dr. Bronfenbrenner contrasts the American and Soviet approaches to child-rearing in his new book, "Two Worlds of Childhood/U.S. and U.S.S.R. (Russell Sage Foundation). He has made nine visits to the Soviet Union in the last ten years, observing children from their first year of life through their early teens.

Soviet upbringing, he maintains, emphasizes the development of character and aims to develop a "new Soviet man" concerned about society's needs. But the United States seems to him to be developing a less socially minded man. Pattern of Life he said in an interview here. "It's that the pattern of life in Western society does not permit people to become interested in children. The amount of time spent at work and going to work, and the social obligations imposed by many occupations and professions, effectively exclude time for one's children. This exclu-sion is reinforced by the American's fetish for professionalization—the notion that other people know better.

"Parents find their role reduced to coordinator of schedules, chanffeur, baby sitter or chaperone. A 'good mother' nowadays is one who picks the right camp for her children,"

"You become human by contact with others older than yourself who enable you by interaction with them to acquire a personality.

On the Arts Agenda

The Paris Théatre des Nations season, somewhat truncated in comparison with previous years, runs this year from May to 29 at the Théatre de France (Odéon) and at the theater of the Tréteaux de France in Les Halles, the former Paris central market. Prague's Theater za Branou presents two productions at the Odéon from May 6 to 16, Chekhov's "Ivanov" and Musset's "Lorenzaccio," both experimental productions with designs by Josef Syoboda and translations and adaptations by Otomar Krejca, the company's director, Karel Kraus and Josef Topol. These are followed by a Romanian musical comedy, "Madame, Chiritza," by Tudor Musatescu, and the Tea-tro Stabile of Genoa with Goldoni's "Una delle Ultime Sere di Carnevale." The two productions at Les Halles are Ariosto's "Orlando Furioso," by the Testro Libero of Rome, and "Stomp," by The Combine, a company of former University of Texas students. It is staged by Douglas Dyer, who is said to have conceived the production while staying in a hotel in the Halles area during the events of May-June,

New British Budget Provides Tax Relief for Legitimate Theaters

LONDON, April 15 (NYT).— The legitimate theaters of Britain won a significant tax concession yesterday from the Chancellor of the Exchequer, Roy Jenkins.

He exempted the production of plays from selective employment tax, a head tax on every employee that is imposed on almost all non-manufacturing industry. A similar concession was made for film production. last year.

The step follows a recent report by the Arts Council noting that the commercial theater is having an increasingly hard time, in comparison to the subsidized repertory companies. The report urged some public investment in commercial plays. Relief from SET will save a large theater in London's

BLONDIE

BRIDGE-■By Alan Truscott

South opened with one heart and rebid two diamonds when her partner responded one spade. North's second-round jump to four hearts was a slam invitation and suggested a good hand, although perhaps not quite as good as North actually held. Relying on her partner to hold a very substantial hand, South ventured into Blackwood and settled in six hearts when her partner showed three aces. It was not easy for West to know that a diamond lead would be a killer, and she selected the heart jack for reasons of safety. This solved a minor problem for the declarer, but the major problem of the diamond suit remained.

With a problem suit of this kind the decision should be postponed in the hope that some clues become available. South therefore drew all of East's trumps and continued with the spade king and jack. The appearance of West's queen not only gave South an extra spade trick for a diamond discount with the spade trick for a diamond discount with the spade trick for a diamond discount with the space was her a cline card but also gave her a clus to the distribution.

West was known to have started with exactly two spades and exactly one heart, which left ten cards in the minor suits. Several of these figured to be in diamonds, for with great club length West would no doubt have tried a pre-emptive over-Call.

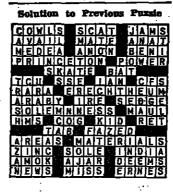

On this basis the "inferior" play of the diamond suit sud-denly became attractive. If East was short in diamonds, as South inferred, there was no reason to play her for any honor at all. The declarer therefore led a low diamond from dummy and had no problem at all when East discarded a spade. Even if East had followed suit with a low diamond South Would have had excellent prospects of making the slam by taking the ace and leading toward the

LOSING BATTLES

By Eudora Welty. Random House, 436 pp. 17.95. Reviewed by Richard Rhodes

pear, was deliberately to write a masterpiece—not in the promotional but in the original sense of that word. Eudora Welty built this work on all her welty built this work on all her years of learning, through seven novels—among them "Delta Wedding" (1946) and "The Ponder Heart" (1954)—and many short stories. In "Losing Battles" Miss Welty intended that we should see rural Mississippi in the middle of the Depression as if we had been born there and grown up in its ways, and she intended at the same time that we should see it entirely within the frame of the traditional novel. She succeeds, but at the sacrifice of exuberance, of that awkward but enormously gratifying waste-fulness which spills from every page of "Moby Dick" or "Leaves of Grass" or Emerson's "Es-says" Miss Welty has taken the form of the novel of manners and deliberately stretched that form to its limit—and not one word farther. Masterpieces, on the other hand break off huge pieces of language that cannot be catalogued. With that said (and not willingly said either), consider the proud bravado of this long work: more than 30 characters at a family reunion, all of them taking turns to talk during a mere two days of actual time spread out over 436 pages; in-tricately interconnected stories of a half-dozen large families spun amidst the frolic and con-fusion of a long day of picnicking, visiting, children, problems. Faulkner carried off this sort of complexity, but no one else recently has tried.

The families come together for their annual reunion to celebrate Granny Vanghn's 90th birthday and to witness the return of her great-grandson Jack Renfro, due out of jail after a year on a legally correct but lo-cally contested charge of burglary. Jack's wife, Gloria, also waits with Jack's baby. Lady May, whom he has never seen. Grandson Noah Webster Beecham ar-rives from out of the country with his mail-order bride. Cleo. The others, crowds of parents and children and dogs, come piling out of cars and trucks of every description. Miss Lexie Renfro walks in late, having left behind her charge, Miss Julia Mortimer, bedridden and apparently senile.

As the stories of the past unfold, the stories of the present begin Judge Oscar Moody, the same who sent Jack Renfro to jail, is out with his wife in her cherished Buck trying to find his way over back-country roads to the reunion to read Miss Julia's will to the assembled families. For Miss Julia had left the house soon after Aunt Lexie that morning, staggered down the street and died-as if by her death to combat the forces of the reunion, the forces of family ties she has dauntlessly tried to break so that children, grandchildren and great-grandchildren might be free to go out toto the modern world. But Mrs. Moody's Buick manages to hang itself on the edge of a cliff with a neighbor boy occupying the back seat and thus maintaining a delicate balance. How Jack Renfro finally

THE PURPOSE, it would apgets the car down involves hear. ly everyone in the novel-and becomes its wildest sequence.

Jack loses his battle to get ahead in the world; Gioria his her battle to tear Jack and from the family, the semion loses its battle to make remism safe from Miss Julia; Miss Julia loses her battle to force Ban ner, Mississippi, into the modern world; Aunt Oleo loses ber hattle to deflate the collective family ego; Judge Moody loses his battle to stay alouf from are far from being all the losses implied by the title. Yet in the end everyone gains other strengths and other satisfactions, even Miss Julia.

"Losing Battles" does many things, but one of the things it does best is recapture the sense of kinship that was the strongest force in the settlement of America. If we have ever wondered how our pioneer anceston longer: They stuck together.

Yet the stricture which began this review returns to mind. Because Miss Welty chose to write in the Jameslan tradition (only once in the entire novel, for example, does she use even indirect internal monologue to advance her story), all the characters seem mythological. They know too much, see too much, anticipate events too skillfully—as they must, since they speak and act on the author's behalf. Their authority is a strength, but also a flaw, for it constantly reminds us that the story we are reading is being constructed before our eyes, as Rensissance perspective reminds us that the canvas is after all, flat. "Losing Battler" is an immensely entertaining and brilliantly written antique, to be respected for the purity of its lines, but to be treated with some regard for the fragility of its construction.

Richard Rhodes's study of the Middle West, "The Inland Ground," will be published next fall. He wrote this review for Book World, literary supple-ment of The Washington Fost.

Plans for Match Against Rhodesia

-Israel's Lawn Tennis Association decided yesterday to go ahead with preparations for the Israeli-Rhodesian Davis Cup match in nearby Ramat Gan early next month while the entire issue appeared heading for a parliamentary dehate. The association has been under pressure from the Foreign Ministry not to play Rhodesia in view of a recent UN Security Council resolution calling on all UN members to sever ties with Ian Smith's white minority regime, But a member of the Israeli splinter right-wing party, the Free Center, called for a debate in the 120-seat Israeli parliament on the Foreign Ministry action, which he said was an "undue political intervention with sports." Deputy Haim Shostay also warned the Foreign Ministry action may jeopardize Israel's position in the world of sports.

The Old Nixon Returns

WASHINGTON. — I can now reveal why President Nixon made his bitter attack on the Senate after the Judge Carswell defeat. From talking to inside

White House . . sources and putting bits and pieces together. have learned that this is what happened. Wednesday night after

Carswell had been defeated, everyone in Buchwald Washington had gone to bed except the President at the White House and Martha Mitchell at the Watergate, who was still trying to rouse someone at the Arkansas Gazette.

The President was in a despondent mood and was paring up and down his bedroom, when out of the clothes closet came the Old Nixon.

The Old Nixon seemed jubilant, "Welf, you see what hap-pens when you're Mr. Nice Guy."

"Oh, go away," the New Nixon said, "You always come around to gloat when something goes wrong,

The Old Nixon said, "You wouldn't listen to me, would you? You wanted to remain above politics, a statesman, a man of all the people. I told you it wouldn't work."

"How could I do otherwise?" "You thought you could let Spiro do all the name calling and the mud slinging," the Old Nixon said, "But it wasn't that easy, Dicky."

Nobel Prize-Winner To Head Cannes Jury

PARIS. April 15 (AP).-Miguel Angel Asturias, Guatemala's ambassodor in Paris and Nobel literature prize winner in 1967, will be president of the Cannes film festival jury this year, festival organizer Robert Favre Le Bret announced today. The other jurors for the lestival next mouth are: German director Volker Schoendorff. American film star Kirk Douglas. Italian director M. Biraghi, Czech director Vojtech Jaany. Sergei Obrasov of the Soviet Union, French producer Christine Gouze-Renal, and French writer Félicien Marceau.

"What can I do now?" the

New Nixon protested loudly. "Rush, you'll wake up Pat." the Old Nixon said. "This is what you can do. You can call the press and say that both Haynsworth and Carswell were victims of vicious assaults on their honesty and racial beliefs because they were from the South. And you can hint that you will make it perfectly clear that anyone who voted against the Carswell appointment will be treated very roughly by the administration."

"But that's dirty pool." the New Nixon protested. "Some of the men in the Senate voted

"Haven't you learned anything since you've been in the White House?" the Old Nixon shouted, exasperated.

"Now you're going to wake up Pat," the New Nixon said. "Sorry." the Old Nixon said.
"Look. Dick. What is the most important thing in the whole wide world to you?"

The New Nixon thought for a moment. "Winning the South in "Right. And the only way you can do it is by publicly stating tomorrow morning that both your nominees for the Supreme Court were defeated by a concerted effort of civil rights groups and liberals because they were Southerners."

"Can't Spiro do that?" "No", the Old Nixon said. "The South wants to hear it from you. If you don't show them how mad you personally are, you can watch your whole Southern strategy go up in smoke."

"I can't do it." the New Nixon said. "I'm President of the United States. It would be lowering myself to make the Supreme Court a partisan political issue

"All right," the Old Nixon said, "If you won't do it, I'll do

"You?" "Why not? I've been holed up in that damn closet for over a year. Give me a chance. Dick." The New Nixon thought hard for a few moments. "All right." he finally said. "Go ahead, but keep me out of it."

Behind a Cab Driver's Tough Talk

By Richard Dougherty

NEW YORK.—It's a marvelous life," said Robert Weinstock as he wheeled his taxi into Central Park and headed "I wouldn't trade with Rockenorth.

How long, he was asked, had he been driving a cab in New York? "How long?" he replied out of the side of his mouth. "After one day, it's too long."

Everything else changes in the nation's biggest city-much of it for the worse in recent years. But the stereo-typed image of the New York cab driver as epitomized by Mr. Weinstock seems to go on and on. The New York cabble is a figure of legend: the wise guy, the tough talker, the cynic. The man who must always have the last word.

But, the bushy-haired, quick-tongued Mr. Weinstock to the contrary-"sixteen years at this business. I gotta be mentally ill"-change is beginning to make itself felt on the New York taxi driver. According to J. Martin Seldenfeld, a psychologist who has served as a consultant to the taxi industry here for the past year, the stereotype was always misleading. As time goes by, Mr. Seldenield contends, it will become even more so.

Unconscious Need

Behind the talkative hard-bitten facade of the New York cab driver, Mr. Seidenfeld says, lies an unconscious need to be cared for and admired by a father-figure. The whole performance of the worldly philosopher and expert-on-everything is, in other words, little more than a device to hide a desire to impress the customer.

Mr. Seidenfeld, who was hired by the Metropolitan Taxi Cab Board of Trade -an association of fleet owners-to improve personnel practices and driver recruiting, has uncovered other characteristics in his studies.

He has found, for example, that "to a significant degree," the ordinary New York taxi man comes from a larger-than-usual family and tends to be an older brother. This makes for a paradox in which the cabble's pose as a thick-skinned, highly independent character goes hand in hand with an older sibling's deep-rooted inclination to take "good care of baby brother and sister."

The best way to get on friendly terms with even the grouchiest driver, it follows, is to ask for his help or advice-"Appeal." in Mr. Seidenfeld's words, "to

"They proclaim their independence, but take orders from anyone who steps into their cabs."

Desire to impress?

Thirty or more years ago, according to Mr. Seidenfeld, the vast majority of taximen in New York were first-generation Irish, Jewish and Italian boys-products of poor immigrant neighborhoods like the Lower East Side where toughness and wit were essential to survival. Much of the humor of cab drivers, Mr. Seidenfeld believes, still shows the influence of the Jewish humor of those early immigrant years - somewhat self-mocking, keenly aware of the ridiculous in human affairs

In recent years, however, a later immi-grant wave has moved in and the old ethnic order is giving way to the Puerto Rican and the Negro who has come up from the South. There are also 500 women among the nearly 30.000 holders of licenses to drive cabs in the city. This all suggests that Mr. Weinstock and his type may be vanishing.

But Mr. Seidenfeld has somewhat to his surprise, found that the "underlying psychological mechanisms" among black and Puerto Rican drivers who are full-time, long-term taximen are identical with those of the earlier generation.

Behind the facade: "A need to be cared for."

Almost invariably, the psychologists' studies have shown, the new men are "older siblings from larger-than-average families": they express their "repressed need to be cared for by taking care of others": and "they proclaim their inde-pendence and toughness but take orders from virtually anyone who steps into

Aside from personality traits, of course, there is the fact that New York itself helps shape the manners and attitudes of the average driver.

Passenger Complaints

More than 6,800 passenger complaints of driver rudeness or refusal to go to a distant destination were made last year to the police department's back bureaua substantial rise from the previous year. (A figure which could be thought "remarkably low," says Mr. Seidenfeld, when measured against the fact that about a million riders a day are accommodated by the 11.787 taxis in the city.)

Traffic congestion is the most frequently voiced complaint of the cabby because it slows him down and reduces the business he can do. But crime is another major source of concern. Fear of assault and robbery is, according to taxi industry spokesmen, a chief element in the wariness and suspicion of drivers -particularly at night.

Cabbies point with alarm to police figures that show taxi holdups here to be sharply on the rise-averaging 130 a month last year as compared to 90 a month the year before.

Turnover is high among drivers who are new to the trade, according to Mr. Seidenfeld, but remains low among veterans like Robert Weinstock-crime, traffic and relatively low pay notwithstanding. Most cabbles average around $3,500 a year with tips.

A kind of "automatic elimination pro-cess" goes on Mr. Seidenfeld says, through all the fears and irritations and frustrations of the work.

While a man's economic situation may keep him in a job for a while, in the long run the generalization is valid: People work where their deepest needs find satisfaction.

tral Park, Mr. Seidenfeld's observations were relayed to cab driver Weinstock. He was not impressed. "A head shrinker." he said. "So what
